

Call for Papers

The Companion to Architectural Research (CAP) will examine the question:

Why is research important in architecture?

The publication will offer a platform to facilitate future lines of inquiry, while also providing an overview of established and emerging understandings of architectural research. Oftentimes, architectural research supports education both directly, through research training of future architects, and indirectly, by providing for the continual advancement of the discipline, but what is architectural research? This companion will debate this question and invites contributions that conceptualize the particular state of architectural research today, proposes methodologies to better understand architectural research, and/or discusses concrete case studies that highlight a historical dimension of architectural knowledge and the contemporary importance.

CAP accepts manuscripts written in English, 6,000 words maximum (including footnotes and bibliography).

Timeline

July 2020	Launch of Call
Dec 2020	Deadline for paper submissions
Jan-Mar 2021	Peer-review process
Apr-May 2021	Revisions, as necessary
Jun-Aug 2021	Copy editing and proofreading
Sept 2021	Publication

Please email proposals and manuscripts to: emarti95@kennesaw.edu